ABOUT ERIN HILLS

Nestled in the Kettle Moraine region of Wisconsin, and located in the small, historic town of Erin, Wis., the glacier-formed Erin Hills golf course is home to Wisconsin's first-ever U.S. Open Championship. Bob Lang, the original owner of the farmland, wanted to create a course that was challenging enough to hold a major championship but also a place open to the public. At first glance, the task of making the terrain to the standards of the other U.S. Open courses looked daunting, but four short years after completion Erin Hills was named the host of the 117th U.S. Open.

Three architects – Dr. Micheal Hurdzan, Dana Fry and Ron Whitten – used the natural landscapes as their guides to place each hole of the course. Paired with clusters of greenside bunkers, wetlands and long par-fives, the course has the difficulty and the breathtaking views players and viewers can enjoy. Over six years of planning and construction, Erin Hills measures out to 7,693 yards— the second longest course in U.S. Open history.

The mix of geological features and the added modern and traditional elements creates a challenge for the golfers as Erin Hills hosts its first ever U.S. Open.

FOX SPORTS TECHNOLOGY AT THE U.S. OPEN

AUGMENTED REALITY: FOX Sports' augmented reality offerings get a boost from a 75-foot Strada Camera Crane, enabling graphic elements to be displayed on the course as well as a studio jib, which allows for unique analysis of the golf course in a studio setting.

SHOT-TRACING TECHNOLOGY: Adding to its efforts to provide accurate shot-tracing graphics, FOX Sports will equip all 18 holes with the ability to trace the golf ball, whether over live video or over a graphic representation of the specific golf hole. Nine tee boxes are equipped with Toptracer technology, allowing for live ball trace over video. The remaining nine tee boxes are equipped with Trackman radar, allowing for a combination of ball tracing and enhanced data. Two of these Trackman tee boxes will show a traditional ball trace along with data captured from the radar, while seven of the Trackman-equipped tee boxes will be used to show Emmy-nominated FOX FlightTrack. There also will be a reverse tracer with the ability to show shots coming into the 15th green, as well as three roaming RF Toptracer units to provide even more flexibility in showing fairway shots on any hole.

WEATHER-GATHERING INSTRUMENTS: With the expectation that wind may be a factor at Erin Hills, FOX Sports is deploying five weather instruments strategically around the course, capturing wind direction and wind speed in an effort to display any impact on play.

AERIAL DRONE FOOTAGE: Beginning with four days of aerial production drone flights, FOX Sports captures unique images from each of the 18 holes, delivering an unrivaled vantage point to viewers.

4K: In cooperation with DirecTV, FOX Sports is offering three holes in stunning 4K, through the Featured Holes Channel.

FOX SPORTS U.S. OPEN BROADCASTERS

Leading coverage of the 2017 event, Joe Buck returns for his third U.S. Open Championship, joined in the 18th Tower by lead analyst Paul Azinger and analyst Brad Faxon for the second consecutive year.

Two-time U.S. Open Champion Curtis Strange returns as an on course commentator and will be joined on the fairways by Steve Flesch, Juli Inkster and Ken Brown. Brown will also bring Erin Hills to life with his series of "Brownie Points" throughout the week.

Holly Sonders hosts studio coverage throughout the championship, while reporter Shane Bacon conducts pre and post round interviews. Renowned course architect Gil Hanse provides course and design analysis and David Fay weighs in as rules expert. Play-by-play announcer Shane O'Donoghue will be joined by Darren Clarke to call part of FOX Sports' extensive live championship coverage.

FOX Sports once again delivers extensive digital coverage at the U.S. Open, this year anchored by Joel Klatt and Justin Kutcher who provide play-by-play for featured groups. They are joined by a team of analysts and reporters which includes Mark Brooks, Jay Delsing, Luke Elvy, Jason Gore, Natalie Gulbis, Buddy Marucci, Ned Michaels, Joe Ogilvie and Brett Quigley.
